CONGRESS FARM SESSION OPENS ON MONDAY

MORE THAN 500 LEGISLATORS ARE ASSEMBLING

MOST OF THEM ARE BRINGING
NEW IDEAS FOR LEGIS-LATION

LEADERS HOPE TO CONFINE THE
BUSINESS TO FARM RELIEF,
TARIFF REVISION

By PAUL R. MALLON

Washington, April 13.—With more than 500 legislators assembling for the opening of President Hoover's special farm session of congress Monday, most of them with new ideas for legislation, congressional leaders today worked out a two-fold plan with which they hope to narrow the business of the session to the two points desired by the president — farm relief and tariff revision.

First a personal appeal is being made to all senators to withhold demands for general legislation and second, Senator James E. Watson, the new republican floor leader, is seeking to arrange a 30-day adjournment of the senate after the first four weeks of the session.

Watson's scheme would permit passage of the farm bill and a combined bill for the 1930 census and reapportionment of the house of representatives. These two measures can be pushed through within a month, he believes.

Watson proposes the senate then adjourn for 30 days, reconvening when the tariff bill is made ready for senate action by the finance committee.

The house is preparing to organize only two or three committees so the program cannot run loose there. Leaders believe they can hold the senate within bounds, despite the broad rules of the upper house. They are using every pressure to swing the unruly ones into line.

The farm bill already is prepared in the house. It has been drafted by the agriculture committee and has been shown to the president. Its contents have not yet been divulged but it is known to provide a general farm board to lend money to co-operators for orderly marketing from a revolving fund of $500,000,000.

The senate committee is in a squabble over the proposition of whether the debenture plan should be tacked on the bill as an option to be used by the board in case of necessity. The committee met today to vote on the proposition.

Although it may be necessary to delay a vote until Monday or Tuesday, Chairman McNary still is planning on having his bill ready for consideration in the senate Wednesday.

Washington, April 13.—The agricultural bill written by the house sub-committee will be introduced in its present form, it was decided today by members of the committee after a breakfast conference with Pres. Hoover at the White House.

The draft of the bill was presented to the president yesterday and its provisions were discussed freely this morning.

Those who attended the White House breakfast this morning were Chairman Haugen of the house agricultural committee, and Representatives Purnell and Williams, republicans, and Aswell and Kincheloe, democrats, members of the sub-committee which drafted the bill. In addition Secretary of Agriculture Hyde and Walter Newton, White House secretary, were present.

The president expressed gratification over the progress the committee had made in whipping the agricultural bill into shape. Although no statement was forthcoming from the White House the fact that the bill will be introduced in its present form, was taken to mean that the president was satisfied with the essential features of the bill.

BANDITS ENGINEER 2 DARING DAYLIGHT ROBBERIES IN DETROIT

Detroit, Mich., April 13.—(UP)—Bandits engineered two daring daylight robberies here today.

A "note bandit" held up the Warren avenue branch of the Peninsula State Bank and escaped with approximately $6,000, while an amateur bandit, visibly nervous, invaded the offices of the Empire Finance company, in a downtown bank building, and robbed two girl employees of $450.

It was the fourth "note bandit" holdup here in the last month.

To Check Any Municipal Extravagance on Range

GIRLS CAUTIONED ABOUT CARELESS USE OF CIGARETTES

New York, April 13.—(UP)—Girls attending Bernard college have been informed that if they do not exercise more care in their handling of cigarettes their use of tobacco will be confined to a designated room. This would safeguard the college, as three fires have been started recently from discarded cigarettes.

FEDERAL CAVALRY OF MEXICANS ATTACKS REBELS

CLAIM 22 REBELS KILLED AND 38 PRISONERS IN SUR- PRISE BRUSH

MEXICAN FEDERALS AT NACO PREPARE FOR IMPENDING INSURGENT ATTACK

Naco, Ariz., April 13.—(UP)—An announcement at the federal headquarters in Naco, Sonora, today said a detachment of federal cavalry and infantry had killed 22 rebels and taken 38 prisoners in a surprise attack on an encampment of rebels 4 miles south of Naco yesterday.

Federal losses were one dead and two wounded, the report said.

(By United Press)

The Mexican federal garrison at Naco, Sonora, continued preparations today for an impending rebel attack. Reports indicated the rebels still were concentrating their forces before the town and were awaiting the arrival of additional troops from Chihuahua and other points before making a concerted drive.

It was reported 1,500 of the rebel troops who survived the campaign at Jimenez and Reforma, were nearing the scene of operations in Sonora, but Mexican government officials expressed the belief that the insurgents would be repulsed before Naco as they had been driven off twice before.

Meanwhile, Major General William Lassiter in charge of the United States troops in the border area dispatched several additional contingents of American soldiers to reinforce the border patrol already on duty there. This was as a precautionary move against possible infringement of American rights through hostilities across the border.

Other reports indicated the collapse of the revolution merely was a matter of days. The desertion of the rebel cause by General Francisco Manzo, one of the leading rebel generals, added to this belief.

More strength was added to this opinion by the desertion of the cause by Gilbert Valenzuela, an ardent supporter of the revolution and a former candidate for the Mexican presidency.

Both were reported to have crossed into the United States.

JOESTING AIDS IN INCORPORATING NEW TRAINING CAMP

St. Paul, April 13.—(UP)—Bristling with the names of famous Gopher athletes and coaches, Camp Arrowhead, Inc., an organization which will conduct a recreational and training camp at Lake Vermillion, filed articles of incorporation at the capitol today. Incorporators include Herb Joesting, all-American fullback; George Gibson, all-American guard; Carl Lidberg, all-Western fullback; Emil Iverson, hockey coach, and Dr. L. J. Cooke, athletic director.

SEN. JOSEPH BAILEY DROPS DEAD IN SHERMAN COURTHOUSE

Sherman, Tex., April 13.—(UP)—Senator Joseph Weldon Bailey, for years a national political figure, fell dead in the Grayson county courthouse at noon today.

He had come here from Tulsa, Okla., to conduct arguments in the Red river bridge case and while talking swooned. He died before medical aid could reach him.

Relatives were notified and plans made to send the body to his home in Dallas.

3 Heavily Armed Unmasked Bandits Capture Glencoe Marshal, and Then Loot Two Stores

RIFLE CLOTHING AND DRUG STORE OF TOWN

STEAL A LARGE QUANTITY OF SUITS, OVERCOATS AND OTHER MERCHANDISE

AT DRUG STORE TRIO SEIZED A LOT OF PRESCRIPTION WHISKEY

Glencoe, Minn., April 13.—(UP)—Three heavily armed, unmasked bandits raided Glencoe early today, overpowered and bound Chief of Police Joseph Kosek, 47, and escaped with loot from two business establishments valued at more than $3,000.

Several hours later police discovered evidence that the men had passed through Norwood, where hardly 24 hours before Marshal M. J. Herman was seriously wounded by three bandit suspects, all of whom were captured after two had been wounded, one seriously.

The Glencoe bandit gang rifled the George Bell Clothing Store of a large quantity of suits, overcoats and other merchandise and then broke into the Kadlec Drug Store which was robbed of a large supply of whiskey.

Norwood police found an empty whiskey case along the highway which indicated that the men had passed through that village perhaps on their way to the Twin Cities.

No shots were fired as the bandits went about their criminal work here. The three men approached Kosek as he paroled the streets about 3 A. M. and asked where they could get gasoline enough to carry them to Minneapolis.

Kosek informed them that there were no filling stations open and one of the bandits grabbed the chief and with an oath said, "Well, we will open one."

The officer was bundled into the bandits' car, his revolver was taken away and he was given a "ride" for a short distance.

One of the bandits asked Kosek if there was another marshal on duty. He informed the fellow that there was not but the bandit grew angry and threatened to "blow the can" off the chief if he did not reveal where the other officer could be found.

Kosek finally convinced the bandits that he alone was on duty. Then they stopped the car and securely bound the officer and carried him to the Bell Clothing Store while they rifled the establishment.

Some time after the bandits were gone Kosek wrenched his way out of his bonds and spread the alarm.

No accurate check had been made shortly before noon today of the loss in the two robbed stores but it was said that it would surely be more than $3,000.

Minneapolis, April 13.—An interesting sidelight on the Glencoe robbery was revealed here today when three bandit suspects captured after an attempted raid at Norwood early Friday, assertedly confessed that they too had planned to rob the clothing store and drug store at Glencoe.

John Fort, who was shot in the body, Andy Wong, a Chinese who was shot in the arm, and Thomas Verkenner, the third bandit suspect, were said to have revealed that they went to Glencoe on Thursday night, bent on robbery but changed their plans and went to Norwood.

Fort still was in critical condition today as was M. J. Hermann, Norwood marshal who was shot during a gun battle with the bandit suspects.

PRESENT 'VOICE' TO LEGISLATIVE MEMBER

Jefferson City, Mo., April 13.—(UP)—Members of the Missouri legislature presented a "voice" to their voiceless member, O. B. Whitaker. "I know that on account of my dumbness I have often delayed the progress of this body," Whitaker wrote in thanking the legislators for a typewriter.

PRES. GEMMELL MAY RIDE FREE ON HIS OWN LINES

St. Paul, April 13.—(UP)—W. H. Gemmell, Brainerd, president of the Minnesota & International railroad, may ride on his own lines free of charge today after Governor Theodore Christianson affixed his signature to a bill which makes it lawful for him to do so.

Gemmell recently was elected a member of the University of Minnesota board of regents and under the law a state official is denied the right to ride trains on a pass. A legislative bill designed to correct the obvious absurdity in the Gemmell case was passed by the house and senate and with the signature of the governor became law.

FURTHER TOLL OF DEAD IN THE ARKANSAS GALE

VIOLENT DESTRUCTION SEEN IN ISOLATED AREAS EXPLORED

MAY ALSO BE FURTHER DEATHS AMONG 131 SERIOUSLY INJURED

Newport, Ark., April 13.—(UP)—Further increase in the list of 57 known dead in the tornado which swept six Arkansas counties, seemed probable today as additional word of violent destruction in isolated areas and unfavorable reports from tired physicians caring for the 131 seriously injured were received at relief headquarters here.

Alfred Evans, assistant disaster relief director of the National Red Cross, today reported 242 persons injured, destruction of 350 homes and some 1,700 persons homeless.

Swift, Guion, Parkin, Allica and Batesville, towns hardest hit by the storm, which in half an hour caused utter destruction in a large part of an area 100 miles square, had become tent villages in which storm victims moved about open fires built from the ruins of their homes.

Group funerals in many parts of the ravaged district added to the distress of the survivors.

SAFETY OF FOUR AIRMEN, SOUTHERN CROSS, ASSURED

RESCUE PARTIES PREPARING TO BRING THEM BACK TO CIVILIZATION

PLANE BELIEVED IMBEDDED IN MUD FLATS, PREVENTING TAKE-OFF

Sydney, N. S. W., April 13.—(UP)—With the safety of the four Southern Cross airmen assured today and rescue parties preparing to bring them back to civilization, anxiety increased for Keith Anderson and his mechanic, Hitchcock, who failed to return from a flight in search of the trans-Pacific plane.

Anderson and Hitchcock took off from Alice Springs Wednesday for Wyndham, planning to scout over the northwest wastelands for Capt. Charles E. Kingsford-Smith and his three companions. No word has been heard from them since.

Unless it is found the Southern Cross is damaged or imbedded too deeply in the mud flats on which it rests to take off, no overland rescue attempts will be made.

MAROONED IN THEIR HOME BY FLOOD TIDE

Revere, Mass., April 13.—(UP)—Marooned in their home by a flood tide, Mrs. James Shea and her two children, one a 10-months-old baby, were rescued by firemen with the aid of a rowboat here today.

Other families had been warned by firemen and had left their homes without assistance.

Driven from Chihuahua by the presence of General Calles' forces, the army of General Escobar, rebel leader, is crossing the Sierra Madre mountains into Sonora. These movements, in addition to the reported rebel evacuation of Jaurez, leave little territory still in insurgent hands.

BODY OF HERRICK IS RETURNED TO HIS NATIVE SOIL

FLAGS FLUTTER AT HALF-MAST AS FRENCH CRUISER DOCKS AT NEW YORK

COL. LINDBERGH AMONG MANY MOURNERS AT THE PIER

By HARRY R. ZANDER
(United Press Staff Correspondent)

New York, April 13.—America and France joined in sorrowful tribute today to Myron T. Herrick, whose body was brought home with the most solemn honors the two nations could pay.

In death, as in life, Herrick was a bond of affection between the two republics. As his body lay in a flag-draped casket on the deck of the French cruiser Tourville, which carried it from France, diplomats and army and navy men of both nations bowed in reverence. The relations of 150 years, begun by Lafayette, seemed closer than ever.

An affecting tribute was paid by Col. Charles A. Lindbergh, America's flying hero. With the family and personal friends of Herrick, he boarded the Tourville when she docked before noon at the French line pier in the North river, and stood bareheaded by the coffin.

Lindbergh stood there for two minutes, his hands clasped behind him, and swift memories of Herrick's graceful sponsorship when Lindbergh flew from New York to Paris were evoked. Two years ago, Lindbergh landed in the midst of 100,000 cheering Frenchmen at Le Bourget field.

While the crowd roared "Vive L'Amerique," Herrick mounted the balcony of the field headquarters, waving the flier's helmet, and led the crowd in a demonstration that brought American and French feeling closer together than at any time since the war.

Suddenly Insane Woman Kills Infant Daughter

Central Falls, R. I., April 13.—(UP)—Becoming suddenly insane, Mrs. Edna Bailey killed her 4-months-old daughter, Lois, here today and then made unsuccessful attempts to end her own life.

The fact that the child had been suffocated was discovered after the mother had been struggling in the waters of the Blackstone river. Before attempting to drown herself she had tried suicide by cutting her throat.

VALUES DIMPLE IN HER KNEE AT SUM OF $200

New Haven, Conn., April 13.—(UP)—The city of New Haven has been asked for $200 damages by Miss Eleanor Burns, who charges she lost a dimple in her knee when she slipped on an icy street last February and fell.

The city claims committee took Miss Burns' plea under advisement last night after she described the accident that caused her distress and "caused her to stay home from night school and other good times."

TWO BILLS ARE DESIGNED TO REMEDY EVIL

ONE PROVIDES PER CAPITA TAX REDUCTION FROM PRESENT $100 BASIS

ANOTHER BILL WOULD PLACE MINING TOWNS ON A CASH BASIS

St. Paul, April 13.—(UP)—Two bills designed to discourage municipal extravagance in the Minnesota iron range town were passed late Friday by the senate after sharp debate.

One bill provides that the per capita tax be reduced from the present $100 basis by gradual yearly steps until in 1938 and thereafter it will be $70. These figures were recently agreed upon during a compromise meeting here between representatives of range towns and mining company representatives.

The other measure would place the mining towns on a cash basis and would prohibit issuance of warrants when the treasuries were bare of funds. The towns may, however, under the bill, issue certificates of indebtedness up to 50 per cent of revenue anticipated for the year. The certificates would then have to be redeemed as soon as the taxes were paid.

St. Paul, April 13.—The graduated per capita tax limitation bill, designed to curb municipal extravagance on the iron range, passed by the senate late Friday, was passed today by the house by a vote of 98 to 8 and went to Governor Theodore Christianson for his signature or veto.

Under the bill the present $100 per capita tax limitation will gradually be reduced annually until it will be $70 in 1933 and the years thereafter.

The $70 figure was agreed upon here recently in a meeting between mining company representatives and citizens of range towns.

BANK TAXATION BILLS PASSED

St. Paul, April 13.—(UP)—Two of the five bills designed to permit taxation of capital in competition with banks on the same basis as banks are taxed, were passed today by the Minnesota house.

The first bill, which provides for taxation on capital of all concerns engaged in financial business in competition with banks at the same rate bank shares are taxed, was passed by a vote of 99 to 23.

The second bill provides that all such capital shall be taxed on an assessed valuation of 33 1/3 per cent of the real and true value.

Four other tax bills were laid over and the special order continued until Monday.

St. Paul, April 13.—(UP)—Captain Einar Paul Lundborg, rescuer of Umberto Nobile, commander of the ill-fated dirigible Italia, today was introduced to the Minnesota legislature as "Sweden's foremost aviator."

Loud cheers greeted Speaker John A. Johnson's introduction in the house.

Lundborg said it was a great pleasure to be in Minnesota because of the similarity of much of its land to Sweden. Snow on the ground reminded him of home, the famous flier said. Lundborg will lecture tonight in the People's church.

NORTHWEST WARNED ABOUT NEW $10 COUNTERFEIT BILLS

St. Paul, April 13.—(UP)—The northwest was warned to be on the lookout today for counterfeit $10 bills after several had been discovered in the Twin Cities and Duluth. Frank C. Reilly, secret service agent, issued the warning. Several months ago Fargo and other northwest cities were victimized by counterfeiters.

New York, April 13.—America and France joined in sorrowful tribute today to Myron T. Herrick, whose body was brought home with the most solemn honors the two nations could pay.

In death, as in life, Herrick was a bond of affection between the two republics. As his body lay in a flag-draped casket on the deck of the French cruiser Tourville, which carried it from France, diplomats and army and navy men of both nations bowed in reverence. The relations of 150 years, begun by Lafayette, seemed closer than ever.

An affecting tribute was paid by Col. Charles A. Lindbergh, America's flying hero. With the family and personal friends of Herrick, he boarded the Tourville when she docked before noon at the French line pier in the North river, and stood bareheaded by the coffin.

Lindbergh stood there for two minutes, his hands clasped behind him, and swift memories of Herrick's graceful sponsorship when Lindbergh flew from New York to Paris were evoked. Two years ago, Lindbergh landed in the midst of 100,000 cheering Frenchmen at Le Bourget field.

While the crowd roared "Vive L'Amerique," Herrick mounted the balcony of the field headquarters, waving the flier's helmet, and led the crowd in a demonstration that brought American and French feeling closer together than at any time since the war.

Suddenly Insane Woman Kills Infant Daughter

Central Falls, R. I., April 13.—(UP)—Becoming suddenly insane, Mrs. Edna Bailey killed her 4-months-old daughter, Lois, here today and then made unsuccessful attempts to end her own life.

The fact that the child had been suffocated was discovered after the mother had been struggling in the waters of the Blackstone river. Before attempting to drown herself she had tried suicide by cutting her throat.

TRAPPED WHEN HE STEPPED INTO CHUTE

St. Paul, April 13.—(UP)—Trapped when he stepped into a chute at the Northern Pacific railroad hopper to loosen some coal, C. H. Sullivan, 29, was smothered to death here Friday.

VALUES DIMPLE IN HER KNEE AT SUM OF $200

New Haven, Conn., April 13.—(UP)—The city of New Haven has been asked for $200 damages by Miss Eleanor Burns, who charges she lost a dimple in her knee when she slipped on an icy street last February and fell.

The city claims committee took Miss Burns' plea under advisement last night after she described the accident that caused her distress and "caused her to stay home from night school and other good times."

TWO BILLS ARE DESIGNED TO REMEDY EVIL

ONE PROVIDES PER CAPITA TAX
REDUCTION FROM PRESENT
$100 BASIS

ANOTHER BILL WOULD PLACE
MINING TOWNS ON A
CASH BASIS

St. Paul, April 13.—(UP)—Two bills designed to discourage municipal extravagance in the Minnesota iron range town were passed late Friday by the senate after sharp debate.

One bill provides that the per capita tax be reduced from the present $100 basis by gradual yearly steps until in 1938 and thereafter it will be $70. These figures were recently agreed upon during a compromise meeting here between representatives of range towns and mining company representatives.

The other measure would place the mining towns on a cash basis and would prohibit issuance of warrants when the treasuries were bare of funds. The towns may, however, under the bill, issue certificates of indebtedness up to 50 per cent of revenue anticipated for the year. The certificates would then have to be redeemed as soon as the taxes were paid.

St. Paul, April 13.—The graduated per capita tax limitation bill, designed to curb municipal extravagance on the iron range, passed today by the house by a vote of 98 to 8 and went to Governor Theodore Christanson for his signature or veto.

Under the bill the present $100 per capita tax limitation will gradually be reduced annually until it will be $70 in 1933 and the years thereafter.

The $70 figure was agreed upon here recently in a meeting between mining company representatives and citizens of range towns.

BANK TAXATION BILLS PASSED

St. Paul, April 13.—(UP)—Two of the five bills designed to permit taxation of capital in competition with banks on the same basis as banks are taxed, were passed today by the Minnesota house.

The first bill, which provides for taxation on capital of all concerns engaged in financial business in competition with banks at the same rate bank shares are taxed, was passed by a vote of 99 to 23.

The second bill provides that all such capital shall be taxed on an assessed valuation of 33 1/3 per cent of the real and true value.

Four other tax bills were laid over and the special order continued until Monday.

CAPT. LUNDBORG, NOBILE'S RESCUER, TALKS TO LEGISLATURE

St. Paul, April 13.—(UP)—Captain Einar Paul Lundborg, rescuer of Umberto Nobile, commander of the ill-fated dirigible Italia, today was introduced to the Minnesota legislature as "Sweden's foremost aviator."

Loud cheers greeted Speaker John A. Johnson's introduction in the house.

Lundborg said it was a great pleasure to be in Minnesota because of the similarity of much of its land to Sweden. Snow on the ground reminded him of home, the famous flier said. Lundborg will lecture tonight in the People's church.

NORTHWEST WARNED ABOUT NEW $10 COUNTERFEIT BILLS

St. Paul, April 13.—(UP)—The northwest was warned to be on the lookout today for counterfeit $10 bills after several had been discovered in the Twin Cities and Duluth. Frank C. Reilly, secret service agent, issued the warning. Several months ago Fargo and other northwest cities were victimized by counterfeiters.

Driven from Chihuahua by the presence of General Calles' forces, the army of General Escobar, rebel leader, is crossing the Sierra Madre mountains into Sonora. In the meanwhile, General Calles is personally leading another Federal army against the rebels in Sinola, north of Culiacan. These movements, in addition to the reported rebel evacuation of Jaurez, leave little territory still in insurgent hands.

Fifty Members of Brainerd Order and Advisory Council Guests at St. Cloud

PUT ON SECOND DEGREE

Brainerd Hopes to Reciprocate Courtesy in Near Future

That St. Cloud is a royal entertainer was proved again last evening when about 50 DeMolays and members of the advisory council of Brainerd were guests of the Granite City Chapter Order of DeMolays, the St. Cloud Mother's club and Eastern Star.

The Roosevelt Chapter DeMolays and advisory council arrived in St. Cloud yesterday afternoon at 5:30 o'clock. A banquet was served at 6 o'clock to about 150 DeMolays and members of the advisory councils. The banquet was put on by the St. Cloud Mother's club.

Degree work followed the banquet, the St. Cloud Chapter putting on the first degree with three candidates, and the Roosevelt Chapter of Brainerd putting on the second, or the DeMolay degree.

Speeches were given by Levi Johnson of Brainerd, "Dad" Sharp of St. Cloud, "Dad" Mitchell, Edward Crust, Sr., past chairman of the advisory council, "Dad" J. P. Anderson all of Brainerd and A. M. Wallace of Sauk Center. John Fisher of Brainerd also gave a short talk.

Following the work an April Fool dance was given by the Eastern Star ladies of St. Cloud for the DeMolay boys and their friends. About four hundred were in attendance at the dance.

The Brainerd guests spoke very highly of the hospitality accorded them by the St. Cloud DeMolays, the Advisory Council, the Mother's club and Eastern Star, stating they had "the time of their life" and that "St. Cloud outdid themselves" in giving them a royal reception. They were made to feel at home as soon as they reached St. Cloud and from them until they left, every moment was enjoyed to the fullest.

The Brainerd Order of DeMolays hope in the near future to be the hosts to the St. Cloud chapter, and the Brainerd boys leave no stone unturned in order that St. Cloud will carry home as good an impression as

GRAPHIC OUTLINES OF HISTORY

By D. E. WHITNEY

A Witchcraft Trial
In the later decade of the 17th century, William Phips, governor of Massachusetts, organized a court for the trial of those accused of witchcraft—a delusion spreading extensively about the country. The first case for judgment was that of an old woman who was immediately convicted, though she declared her innocence to the end.
An understanding of the prophecies fits us to render a service that is at once dignified, beautiful and efficient.

ONE MAN KILLED AT DETROIT, OTHERS SERIOUSLY INJURED

CRASH NEAR FORD AIRPORT AT DEARBORN THIS AFTERNOON

Detroit, April 13.—(UP)—One man was known to have been killed and two others were believed to have received serious injuries when two airplanes crashed at an altitude of 1,500 feet above Ford airport, Dearborn this afternoon.

The injured men were rushed to Dearborn general hospital, but were later removed in another ambulance, presumably to the Henry Ford hospital at Detroit.

Attaches of the airport and hospital officials stated they had instructions to withhold information of the accident and no details of the mishap could be learned, until the Wayne county coroner's office completed a preliminary investigation.

TALKIES MOVE TO NEW HEIGHTS

WITH the announcement that Mary Pickford and Douglas Fairbanks are to appear in Shakespeare's "Taming of the Shrew," the talkies take another forward step. There does not seem to be any permanent horizon in the picture world. Revolutionary changes are made so quickly and the world adapts itself so promptly, that the various phases sometimes excite little comment. Theater audiences take it as a matter of course.

Charley Chaplin's great aim in life was to appear in a Shakespearean play, but while he has been thinking, his neighbors, Mr. and Mrs. Douglas Fairbanks, have acted and Shakespeare will soon be presented in a fashion that would move the dramatist's shade to wish a return to earth to see his child of the drama.

Do you know that the next move in the talkies may be educational and we may get our illustrated lectures on every conceivable subject for release in high schools and colleges? And then think of the trade schools, the business meetings, the salesmen's gatherings that may get their standardized, authorized talks or lectures. A doctor's clinic can be preserved in talkie and movie form, and difficult situations can be repeated at will and slow speed if necessary.

Instead of building huge pyramids like the Egyptians, or erecting squatty mounds like early inhabitants of America to serve as markers for coming generations, we shall can our scenes and talks and preserve the records, so that those who come after may see and hear us as "we were."

The world moves quickly and we all like to live long to see what the next surprise shall be.

BUSH CANNING SEASON

FARIBAULT and Martin counties in southern Minnesota are veritable hives of industry insofar as canning is concerned. It is expected to plant 2,000 acres of peas for packing by the Fairmont Canning company's three plants.

With an expected increase of ten per cent in the pea crop this year over last season, the canneries plan to begin packing June 15 if the season is normal for pea-growing.

Packing of corn will start August 1 and continue until late in September to handle canning of about 5,000 acres of corn to be grown this season. More than 500 acres in lima beans will also be planted for canning purposes.

It is estimated over 700 Martin, Watonwan and Faribault county farmers will share production in the $200,000 corn, pea and bean crops raised for the Fairmont canneries, two of which are located at Fairmont and one in Winnebago.

Brainerd has no canning factory, its nearest approach being a salting station for cucumbers which works intermittently. The soil of Crow Wing county is adapted to raising vegetables. The Hunt canning station in the Bay Lake area is a popular institution and its products are widely known. The secret of canning is prompt canning after picking. At Hunt's the canning station is right on the farm where the crops are grown.

BOY SCOUTS DEMONSTRATIONS

MORE than 300 Boy Scouts of the Owatonna, Faribault and Northfield organizations will stage a three-day series of demonstrations jointly in each of their three home towns during the coming week.

The Faribault event will be held on Thursday evening, April 18; Owatonna, Friday evening, April 19, and in Northfield on Saturday evening, April 20.

A number of selected troops and patrols from each city will present features of the program, which will represent "A Day in Camp" and disclose nearly all phases of Scout activities.

The affair is being presented to acquaint the public with Scout aims, principles and benefits. Plans for the demonstrations are being directed by B. Perry Newton, Faribault (formerly Scout Executive of Brainerd), now South Central Minnesota Area Boy Scout executive, and is backed by the area Scout council and the local councils of the three towns.

CRITICIZING LINDBERGH

WASHINGTON, D. C., newspapers are criticizing Lindbergh and say he splashed mud on his admirers when he landed. We do not know much about the case, but believe the criticism is far-fetched.

The field was undoubtedly muddy to produce water for a splash. The great danger that Lindbergh always experiences is to keep his plane away from surging crowds as he attempts to land. A plane is not as easily landed, or brought to a stop, as a car.

Where there is no police protection, Lindbergh must jockey around to avoid hitting anyone. No doubt the mud splashing drove back a crowd which otherwise would have pushed its leaders into propeller blades or wings.

Washington papers should not assume a critical air until both sides of the story are heard.

CALIFORNIA WEATHER

CALIFORNIA weather the other day received a sad setback when $55,000,000 worth of fruit was nipped by frosts. We have word from one Brainerd man who has an orchard out there that he burned 12 tons of coke and used three barrels of oil in three days in an attempt to "warm up" his orchard and save his crop.

After one surveys California, Florida, Arkansas and other states one comes to the conclusion that Crow Wing county is a good place to live in.

THRIFTY RHODE ISLANDERS

RHODE ISLAND is a thrifty state, judged by the amount of life insurance carried by its people.

Rhode Island has nearly twice as many life insurance policies as it has inhabitants. Figures compiled by state officials show that whereas the population of the nation's smallest state is only 679,260, there are 1,207,370 policies in force.

WHILE several states are warring with the City of Chicago about water diversion and the alleged damage caused by the Chicago drainage canal, Lake Michigan takes it upon itself to reach a stage of water two feet higher than ever.

Train Is Used on Formal Tea Gown

Draped Effects Now Feature Charming Apparel for At-Homes.

The increasing vogue of afternoon tea is causing a renaissance of the formal tea gown. It began two years ago, says a fashion writer in the New York Times, when the sports type of dress gave way to a softer silhouette, and the costume has steadily developed in luxury and artistic design. The most prominent couturiers of Paris equally with American modistes are creating gowns for the tea hour which receive quite as much attention as the most splendid costumes for evening. The fabrics are similar, and lace, embroidery, fur and passementerie are lavishly used.

Though the peak of the winter season has passed and spring is at hand, velvet tea gowns are shown in the collections. Because of its delicate and supple quality velvet lends itself to long lines and soft drapery, and being of feather weight is made into some delightful models.

Many of these introduce the train and long skirt, in styles that are varied according to the type of material. One tea gown, quite medieval in style, is made of russet green velvet on princess lines, with a pointed train. The bodice is cut in a slight V in front, fitting with a suggestion of curve at the waistline and over the hips, where the skirt is attached. This falls to the ankles. It is lifted ever so little in front, and at the back is in two panels, one upon the other, which extend into a narrow train.

This panel back repeats a design used for formal evening gowns shown this season by some of the most prominent French designers and is duplicated with variations in a number of the handsomest tea gowns from Paris. The sleeves of this gown are close-fitting at the top, with wide flaring flounces covering the hand. The edges are rippling, and finished effectively with bands of chinchilla.

All One Piece.

One gown of green velvet from Ardanse of Paris is all one piece, the front draped, and the back a panel extending into a short train. The sleeves are fitted from shoulder to elbow, where they are slashed to hang long, and have a border of white fox, which also finishes the edge of each side of the bodice, opening over a tucker of muslin and lace.

A second green velvet tea gown is delicate in shade, and has no trimming other than a front of batiste, which is shown at the neck, when the material is folded in surplice style, and as a petticoat at the bottom. The sleeves are close-fitting, reaching to the hand, and the material is drawn below the hips into a large rosette. The skirt is wider than the usual model and sweeps into a train. This style of tea gown has so much of that sophisticated simplicity seen in the new evening gowns that it may suitably be worn for informal dinner at home.

This style of gown has been so successful that the model is reproduced in many different colors and in a variety of materials. A poetic creation is shown of Nattier blue velvet and nylon combined. It has the effect of a coat in front and a train at the back, and is worn with a draped under-dress of chiffon, which is revealed between the panels. Silver lace is introduced in the front of the bodice and as a gentle cascade at one side of the skirt.

Nothing more opulent has appeared than a tea gown of satin in a cool yellow which opens over a petticoat of gold lace with three tiered flounces. In this model the bodice is slightly blouse and the skirt, which is a trifle shorter in front and wide, forms the train. A girdle of gilt cord is worn around the low waistline, and deep cuffs are made of the lace.

A brilliant gown of flamingo red chiffon crepe has a slender silhouette of long graceful drapery that is caught in front with an ornament of dull gilt. Another, in golden brown satin, is made with the side panels and pointed train lined with unicolor-colored chiffon, and a slip of crepe de chine in the same shade is trimmed with a wide band of pale gold lace, which appears across the top of the slip in front.

Long sweeps of chiffon varied with lace in the arrangement of drapery make very graceful and flattering tea gowns. Because of the sheer supple character of the material this sort of gown is shown in models with ample skirts, long and attractively uneven, and long trains.

It is considered artistic to have unlined or but thinly-lined fabric trailing the carpet, and for this use there are quantities of unusually attractive examples of silks and synthetic silks. The preference is for soft weaves and lustrous materials, the crepe satins, chiffon velvets and satins, and chiffon and lace.

In Winsome Colors.

In contrast to the tea gowns of velvet, metallic lace and brocades, there are arriving from some of the French houses delightful gowns that suggest the freshness of spring flowers. In these makers take advantage of all the enchanting colors to design tea gowns and robes d'intérieurs for the woman who makes a formal or an intimate occasion of her tea at home.

One of these creations consists of chiffon in three shades of orchid hung from the shoulders after the fashion of Greek drapery. The material is caught at one side of the waist with a jeweled ornament and swathed about the figure to the knee, where it falls away in soft lengths that form a scarf-like train. This is one of several late models in which two or three shades or two contrasting colors are used.

A flower-like gown, the quintessence of elegance, is made of chiffon satin in three shades of yellow, toning from pale lemon to rich orange. The princess model is of yellow satin with panels that are lined with a deeper shade and slashed to show an under-dress of orange chiffon finely plaited.

Lace is in great favor, being used for entire dresses, although in some charming models combined with something else. The newest laces in ecru and taupe and more novel colors are used in lovely gowns draped over chiffon or satin in shades that blend softly. Sharp contrasts are avoided, except for black and white.

One of the mellow combinations is of peach-colored silk lace used over satin a shade lighter—a composition of monotonous that is distinctive among the modes of the day.

Malze chiffon finely plaited and ecru lace in floating panels go into the making of a graceful tea gown that will be suitable for many informal occasions.

Tea Gown in White.

Madeleine Vionnet sends a lovely tea gown in white. It is of ivory satin, straight and loose, with a rolling shawl collar which outlines a surplice effect. The gown is closed to one side and held about a low waistline with a soft girdle knotted with long ends at the opposite side. The top of the bodice is cut in a clever manner to form the sleeve cap. A long cape of ivory velvet hangs in voluminous folds across the back, covering the arms like a mantle and reaching almost to the ankles. The charm of this very unusual hostess gown lies in the classic simplicity of the model and the contrast of dull and lustrous fabrics.

Louiseboulanger creates a hostess gown after her favorite design, of bouffant drapery, which does not differ greatly from her most formal evening gowns. A late offering is a striking affair in yellow and black chiffon with a panel of black satin at the back which is caught up in a large pouf and forms a very narrow scarf train. Side panels of the satin hang free in straight lines over the chiffon from belt to hem.

The Hunt canning station in the Bay Lake area is a popular institution and its products are widely known. The secret of canning is prompt canning after picking. At Hunt's the canning station is right on the farm where the crops are grown.

BOY SCOUTS DEMONSTRATIONS

MORE than 300 Boy Scouts of the Owatonna, Faribault and Northfield organizations will stage a three-day series of demonstrations jointly in each of their three home towns during the coming week.

The Faribault event will be held on Thursday evening, April 18; Owatonna, Friday evening, April 19, and in Northfield on Saturday evening, April 20.

A number of selected troops and patrols from each city will present features of the program, which will represent "A Day in Camp" and disclose nearly all phases of Scout activities.

The affair is being presented to acquaint the public with Scout aims, principles and benefits. Plans for the demonstrations are being directed by B. Perry Newton, Faribault (formerly Scout Executive of Brainerd), now South Central Minnesota Area Boy Scout executive, and is backed by the area Scout council and the local councils of the three towns.

CRITICIZING LINDBERGH

WASHINGTON, D. C., newspapers are criticizing Lindbergh and say he splashed mud on his admirers when he landed. We do not know much about the case, but believe the criticism is far-fetched.

The field was undoubtedly muddy to produce water for a splash. The great danger that Lindbergh always experiences is to keep his plane away from surging crowds as he attempts to land. A plane is not as easily landed, or brought to a stop, as a car.

Where there is no police protection, Lindbergh must jockey around to avoid hitting anyone. No doubt the mud splashing drove back a crowd which otherwise would have pushed its leaders into propeller blades or wings.

Washington papers should not assume a critical air until both sides of the story are heard.

CALIFORNIA WEATHER

CALIFORNIA weather the other day received a sad setback when $55,000,000 worth of fruit was nipped by frosts. We have word from one Brainerd man who has an orchard out there that he burned 12 tons of coke and used three barrels of oil in three days in an attempt to "warm up" his orchard and save his crop.

After one surveys California, Florida, Arkansas and other states one comes to the conclusion that Crow Wing county is a good place to live in.

THRIFTY RHODE ISLANDERS

RHODE ISLAND is a thrifty state, judged by the amount of life insurance carried by its people.

Rhode Island has nearly twice as many life insurance policies as it has inhabitants. Figures compiled by state officials show that whereas the population of the nation's smallest state is only 679,260, there are 1,207,370 policies in force.

WHILE several states are warring with the City of Chicago about water diversion and the alleged damage caused by the Chicago drainage canal, Lake Michigan takes it upon itself to reach a stage of water two feet higher than ever.

Train Is Used on Formal Tea Gown

Draped Effects Now Feature Charming Apparel for At-Homes.

The increasing vogue of afternoon tea is causing a renaissance of the formal tea gown. It began two years ago, says a fashion writer in the New York Times, when the sports type of dress gave way to a softer silhouette, and the costume has steadily developed in luxury and artistic design. The most prominent couturiers of Paris equally with American modistes are creating gowns for the tea hour which receive quite as much attention as the most splendid costumes for evening. The fabrics are similar, and lace, embroidery, fur and passementerie are lavishly used.

Though the peak of the winter season has passed and spring is at hand, velvet tea gowns are shown in the collections. Because of its delicate and supple quality velvet lends itself to long lines and soft drapery, and being of feather weight is made into some delightful models.

Many of these introduce the train and long skirt, in styles that are varied according to the type of material. One tea gown, quite medieval in style, is made of rosea green velvet on princess lines, with a pointed train. The bodice is cut in a slight V in front, fitting with a suggestion of curve at the waistline and over the hips, where the skirt is attached. This falls to the ankles. It is lifted ever so little in front, and at the back is in two panels, one upon the other, which extend into a narrow train.

This panel back repeats a design used for formal evening gowns shown this season by some of the most prominent French designers and is duplicated with variations in a number of the handsomest tea gowns from Paris. The sleeves of this gown are close-fitting at the top, with wide flaring flounces covering the hand. The edges are rippling, and finished effectively with bands of chinchilla.

All One Piece.

One gown of green velvet from Ardanse of Paris is all one piece, the front draped, and the back a panel extending into a short train. The sleeves are fitted from shoulder to elbow, where they are slashed to hang long, and have a border of white fox, which also finishes the edge of each side of the bodice, opening over a tucker of muslin and lace.

A second green velvet tea gown is delicate in shade, and has no trimming other than a front of batiste, which is shown at the neck, when the material is folded in surplice style, and as a petticoat at the bottom. The sleeves are close-fitting, reaching to the hand, and the material is drawn below the hips into a large rosette. The skirt is wider than the usual model and sweeps into a train. This style of tea gown has so much of that sophisticated simplicity seen in the new evening gowns that it may suitably be worn for informal dinner at home.

This style of gown has been so successful that the model is reproduced in many different colors and in a variety of materials. A poetic creation is shown of Natter blue velvet and nylon combined. It has the effect of a coat in front and a train at the back, and is worn with a draped under-dress of chiffon, which is revealed between the panels. Silver lace is introduced in the front of the bodice and as a gentle cascade at one side of the skirt.

Nothing more opulent has appeared than a tea gown of satin in a cool yellow which opens over a petticoat of gold lace with three tiered flounces. In this model the bodice is slightly blouse-like and the skirt, which is a trifle shorter in front and wide, forms the train. A circle of gilt cord is worn around the low waistline, and deep cuffs are made of the lace.

A brilliant gown of flamingo red chiffon crepe has a slender silhouette of long graceful drapery that is caught in front with an ornament of dull gilt. Another, in golden brown satin, is made with the side panels and pointed train lined with maize-colored chiffon, and a slip of crepe de chine in the same shade is trimmed with a wide band of pale gold lace, which appears across the top of the slip in front.

Long sweeps of chiffon varied with lace in the arrangement of drapery make very graceful and flattering tea gowns. Because of the sheer supple character of the material this sort of gown is shown in models with ample skirts, long and attractively uneven, and long trains.

It is considered artistic to have unlined or but thinly-lined fabric trailing the carpet, and for this use there are quantities of unusually attractive examples of silks and synthetic silks. The preference is for soft weaves and lustrous materials, the crepe satin, chiffon velvets and satins, and chiffon and lace.

In Winsome Colors.

In contrast to the tea gowns of velvet, metallic lace and brocades, there are arriving from some of the French houses delightful gowns that suggest the freshness of spring flowers. In these makers take advantage of all the enchanting colors to design tea gowns and robes d'interieurs for the woman who makes a formal or an intimate occasion of her tea at home.

One of these creations consists of chiffon in three shades of orchid hung from the shoulders after the fashion of Greek drapery. The material is caught at one side of the waist with a jeweled ornament and swathed about the figure to the knee, where it falls away in soft lengths that form a scarf-like train. This is one of several late models in which two or three shades or two contrasting colors are used.

A flower-like gown, the quintessence of elegance, is made of chiffon satin in three shades of yellow, toning from pale lemon to rich orange. The princess model is of yellow satin with panels that are lined with a deeper shade and slashed to show an under-dress of orange chiffon finely plaited.

Lace is in great favor, being used for entire dresses, although in some charming models combined with something else. The newest laces in ecru and taupe and more novel colors are used in lovely gowns draped over chiffon or satin in shades that blend softly. Sharp contrasts are avoided, except for black and white.

One of the mellow combinations is of peach-colored silk lace used over satin a shade lighter—a composition of monotonies that is distinctive among the modes of the day.

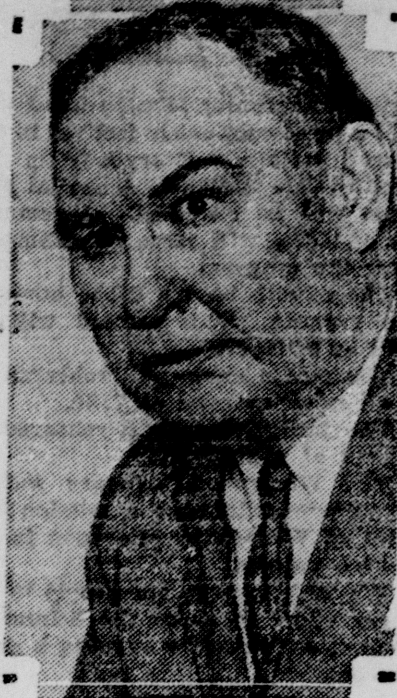

Maize chiffon finely plaited and ecru lace in floating panels go into the making of a graceful tea gown that will be suitable for many informal occasions.

Tea Gown in White.

Madeleine Vionnet sends a lovely tea gown in white. It is of ivory satin, straight and loose, with a rolling shawl collar which outlines a surplice effect. The gown is closed to one side and held about a low waistline with a soft girdle knotted with long ends at the opposite side. The top of the bodice is cut in a clever manner to form the sleeve cap. A long cape of ivory velvet hangs in voluminous folds across the back, covering the arms like a mantle and reaching almost to the ankles. The charm of this very unusual hostess gown lies in the classic simplicity of the model and the contrast of dull and lustrous fabrics.

Louiseboulanger creates a hostess gown after her favorite design of bouffant drapery, which does not differ greatly from her most formal evening gowns. A late offering is a striking affair in yellow and black chiffon with a panel of black satin at the back which is caught up in a large point and forms a very narrow scarf train. Side panels of the satin hang free in straight lines over the chiffon from belt to hem.

LEON TROTSKY IS BARRED FROM GERMANY

Berlin, April 12.—(U.P.)—Leon Trotsky, exiled Soviet chieftain, was definitely barred from Germany today when his application for permission to reside in Berlin was refused by the Reich cabinet.

The government was blunt and brief in its refusal. It issued a communique today which made its stand on the subject final:

"The cabinet discussed the question of Trotsky's entry into Germany. After a thorough examination of all the circumstances the cabinet decided not to grant Trotsky's application."

TRAINING CAMP NOTES

Indianapolis, Ind., April 13.—(UP)—Coming from behind to tie the score in the ninth the Indianapolis Indians won a ten inning victory over the Chicago White Sox, 5 to 4. Monahan, Indianapolis first baseman, tied the score in the ninth with a home run and the Indians followed this with a run in the tenth which meant victory.

Kansas City, Mo., April 13.—(UP)—Home runs by Hornsby and Wilson gave the Chicago Cubs a 4 to 1 victory over the Kansas City team of the American association. Root and Blake pitched good ball for the Cubs, and their hurling kept the Kansas City team subdued.

Birmingham, Ala., April 13.—(UP)—Four runs in the last three innings gave the Birmingham club of the Southern league a 4 to 3 victory over the Cleveland team. The Southern leaguers won the game after Joe Shaute had held them to one run in seven innings.

St. Louis, Mo., April 13.—(UP)—Grover Alexander and Alvin Crowder will pitch in the first of a two-game series between the National league champion Cardinals and the Browns in the American league here today.

Good fortune in the six weeks training camp periods left both lineups complete without injuries or ailments.

New York, April 13.—(UP)—The New York Giants come home today to open the baseball season here with an exhibition game against the Washington Senators. The game will be the fifth of a series, the Senators having won three with the fourth a tie. The Giants won their first yesterday, at Washington, 4 to 0.

Boston, April 13.—(UP)—The Braves and Red Sox open their two game city series here today, the American league club a favorite with the fans. The Braves came here yesterday from Worcester, where rain prevented their scheduled exhibition contest with Holy Cross college.

Philadelphia, April 13.—(UP)—The Phillies and the Athletics bring to a close today their four game city series, with the National leaguers assured of at least a tie with two victories to their credit in the three games already played.

Brooklyn, N. Y., April 13.—(UP)—Little cheer was held out today to the buffeted Brooklyn Robins who face the world champion New York Yankees this afternoon in the first of a two game series, the last training games for both teams.

Memphis, Tenn., April 13.—(UP)—The Pittsburgh Pirates wind up their training season here today, meeting Memphis in the third game of an exhibition series. Each team has won one game and today's contest will decide the series.

KID CHOCOLATE, CUBAN NEGRO, WINS VICTORY

N. Y.

LATTER WAS A CLAIMANT TO
THE BANTAMWEIGHT
CROWN

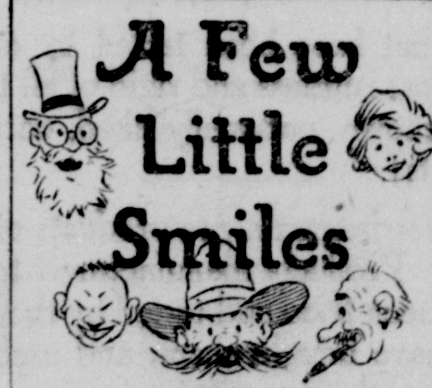

New York, April 13.—(UP)—Kid Chocolate, Cuban negro bantamweight who never has lost a fight, had another victory credited to his record today but it failed to add anything to his claim to the disputed 118-pound title.

Chocolate won on a foul from Bushy Graham, Utica, N. Y., claimant to the bantamweight crown, in the seventh round of a scheduled fifteen round bout before 18,000 spectators at the opening of the New York Coliseum last night.

Referee Jack Dorman stopped the fight after 2 minutes 4 seconds of fighting in the seventh round when Graham landed a low left.

Chocolate did not go down or claim foul. He had floored Graham just a moment previously, and was anxious to continue the fight, sensing a knockout. Graham, who was way ahead on points at the time, wanted to continue.

The crowd which packed the new arena was anxious to see the fight go on to a finish but Referee Dorman's decision prevented the affair from reaching a climax.

PLAYING BEFORE FANS WHO WILL FILL BLEACHERS

ONLY TWO CHICAGO TEAMS AND PITTSBURGH ON FOREIGN TERRITORY

IN NEW YORK GIANTS WILL AT-TRACT LARGE CROWDS TO POLO GROUNDS

By WILLIAM J. DUNN
(United Press Staff Correspondent)

New York, April 13.—The major league ball teams were back in home territory today, playing before the fans who will inhabit the bleachers and follow with most interest their vicissitudes during the 1929 season.

Of the sixteen big league teams, only three remained on foreign territory—the two Chicago teams and Pittsburgh.

Here in New York the Giants will attract large numbers of their followers to the Polo Grounds to watch them work against the Washington Senators in final preparation for the pennant drive which opens Tuesday.

The Yankees—Ruth, Gehrig, et al—will do their stuff against, and probably at the expense of, the Brooklyn Robins at Ebbets Field.

In Boston the Red Sox and Braves launch a two-day city series, allowing Hub fans their first chance to see their men in action. A similar series will close at Philadelphia where the Phillies and Athletics wind up their training by meeting for the fourth time.

St. Louis is the third town where fans may get a glimpse of both their representatives on a single price of admission. Interest probably will center in the Browns, who are showing signs of "making considerable trouble in the American League race.

Cleveland must wait until Wednesday to see the Indians, who assist the Reds today in entertaining the Saturday crowd at Cincinnati.

Detroit will get its first glimpse of the rejuvenated Tigers under the leadership of Bucky Harris, but the opposition will be provided by Toronto, a class AA club.

Chicago fans will await impatiently the arrival of the Cubs, and, more patiently, the White Sox.

COAST GUARDS IN ROW BOATS SAVE 9 PEOPLE

GIANT SEAS SWEEP OVER BOULE-
VARD AT HAMPTON
BEACH, N. Y.

BATTER 30 COTTAGES, WASH
GARAGE AND SEVERAL
PIAZZAS OUT TO SEA

Hampton Beach, N. Y., April 13.—(UP)—Coast guards in row boats rescued nine persons, including four children, and nearly a score of others escaped unassisted early today when giant seas swept over the boulevard here and battered 30 cottages.

A small garage and several piazzas were washed out to sea, and for a time the White Island section of the beach near Hampton river bridge was cut off.

Working under the glare of search lights, the coast guards, in charge of Captain Elden Godfrey and assisted by firemen, battled for more than two hours in the roaring surf to rescue those trapped in the fragile cottages.

Four feet of water had risen around one of the houses before the rescuers succeeded in taking out the eight occupants. Other cottages were undermined.

The boulevard, ordinarily more than 200 yards from the high-water mark, was under two feet of water, and the sea swept inland for a quarter of a mile.

Most of the year-round residents of the beach foresaw the dangers of the mighty tide and evacuated their cottages in time.

Evil Passing for Good

Evil is easy, and its forms are infinite; good is almost unique. But a certain kind of evil is as difficult to find as what is called good; and often on this account this particular kind of evil gets passed off as good. There is needed an extraordinary greatness of soul to attain to it as well as to good.—Pascal.

May Succeed Herrick

Senator Walter Edge, of New Jersey, now seems most likely successor to Paris post left vacant by the death of Myron T. Herrick, late Ambassador to France. Simultaneous with this news comes the announcement that if Edge should accept, former Governor Edward G. Stokes will probably be put forward by the Republican organization as their candidate to succeed the Senator.

By the ancient Greeks the laurel was called "daphne" and was sacred to Apollo. Perry-bearing twigs of it were wound around the foreheads of victorious heroes and poets; and in later times the degree of doctor was conferred with this ceremony, whence the term "laureation."

"JUST FOR LAFFS"

By JOHN J. MCGRAW

(Manager, New York Giants)

Humor in baseball is largely a matter of viewpoint. I guess in the forty years I have been in baseball I have always been involved in many a situation that got a laugh, but here is one I appreciated.

We were playing Brooklyn on the opening day at the Polo Grounds in my second or third year with the Giants. Brooklyn had us beaten by a run in the ninth. There was a man on base and two out. Joe McGinity was at bat and I let him hit because I didn't have a pinch hitter.

Joe hit over the left fielder's head for a triple and tied up the game. The play at third was close and the players crowded around Tim Hurst, who had walked to the plate. McGinity was winded and sat on third. Sammy Strang, Brooklyn's third baseman, didn't join in the argument. He had the ball and was tossing it up in his hand. I called for him to throw it to me and winked at McGinity. Sam threw it, but McGinity didn't see me wink. So I threw it back to Sam, winked at Uddenberg and called for it again.

This time Joe was on and when Strang tossed me the ball McGinity cut for the plate. I rolled it over to the pitcher's box and blamed it on Strang. The game was over and we won! Hurst, of course, couldn't see what happened but 17,000 fans did.

Red Birds of 1929

By QUIN HALL
SOME of the sharps are picking the St. Louis Cardinals to repeat in the National League and again grab the flag in 1929. The Cards have a new pilot in Billy Southworth. That's nothing new in the life of the St. Louis club. It seems that if a manager is good enough to win a pennant for the Mississippi river town, he is good enough to get the sack at the close of the year. St. Louis has been following this old custom for several years now and it seems to be successful. It's funny some of the other clubs don't adopt it. Well, at any rate, Billy Southworth is the latest managerial acquisition and Billy is anxious to take a whirl at pennant winning. If for no other reason than to see if he, too, will get the blue envelope at the close of the season's festivities. Billy didn't say that in those exact words, but to see him working out with his Red Birds at Avon Park, earlier in the Spring, one comes to that conclusion. At least, Billy seems anxious to win a pennant. Or, we might say, another pennant for St. Louis.

Southworth was using a new keystone combination in his exhibition tour through Florida. He had Carey Selpa at second and "the Rochester Flash"—it seems they are going to have plenty of flashes at St. Louis what with the Fordham Flash and one thing or another—Charlie Gelbert at short. With the passing of such shortstops as Thevenow, Maranville and Sand, it appears that the thing of making good has been put up to young Gelbert in a serious way and that youngster is now expected to make the fans forget all about the passing of the old time short-field favorites. Southworth has a lot of faith in Gelbert's ability, and he should know what he is talking about as Gelbert worked with the new pilot last year at Rochester.

If Selpa, who comes from Houston, can make the grade at the keystone spot, Frankie Frisch may be moved over to the hot corner. Otherwise Frisch will go back to his old job at second, with Andy High or Wattie Holm filling in at third.

Southworth has a wealth of infield material and the beauty of it is that most of his inner defense is as versatile as a one-man circus. Most of his laborers can fill in at any spot where they might be needed. This condition should take a load off the new manager. Billy had a lot of rookie twirlers toiling for berths while the squad was at Avon Park, but he will doubtless still depend upon the old guard in the pinches. Alexander, who worked a little against the Braves in a game staged at St. Petersburg, still seems to have all of his famous stuff, and, while Southworth did not force any of his old-time twirlers to work hard under the Florida sun, he is sure to keep the old crew on the payroll.

Clarence Mitchell, the cast-off from three ball clubs and the only remaining left-handed spitball pitcher in baseball, is sure to be started in a lot of contests during the Summer. "Mitch," like Sharkey, is a master of slow ball flinging, and serves up "floaters" with devastating results to the opposing basemen. The old-timer who helped in the pinches last year has a good change of pace and is generally conceded to be baffling.

Southworth, taking the team as a whole, has a good ball club. It doesn't look, however, to be much stronger than last year's team, and it is likely to have a tough time winning the pennant from such clubs as the Cubs, Pirates and Giants. As usual, the fight looks like a hard one, with the Cards having even keener competition than they encountered in 1928.

CHAPTER LXXVIII.

ON Christmas morning Guinn and Irene had a cablegram from Rome.

Love and Christmas wishes to all of you. Lilith and Dan.

Later a letter came from Lilith:

"It was so good of you to write to us. We didn't deserve it, at least I didn't. I was to blame for the whole thing, and I don't see how you can forgive me."

After that it was easier to write—though it was never really easy. Guinn sent a letter each week, and Irene now and then, when she would get to thinking of how Lilith needed counsel and love. What was the child suffering—not only separated from the man she loved, but married, in that fashion, to a man she didn't love?

Tina shut herself all day in her room, at her drawing. Or was she drawing?

Sometimes her father could persuade her to go out in the car with him and wait while he made pastoral visits, and sometimes Irene coaxed her to go on an errand with her, but she shrank from seeing people. She went to church after a few weeks, and sat like a marble figure in the pew, but she stole away before the close of the service, to avoid the greeting of the members. She would go out with Will Lundy oftener than with either of her parents.

For months she would not see her friends when they came to the house, nor go out with them, but gradually she relaxed her frozen reserve and took up her friendships again, but her old sparkling spontaneity was gone. She was like a young widow, not garbed in black, but mantled in reserve that forbade sympathy.

Miss Mattie said to Irene one day, "Ain't it pitiful to watch that child? A grief where you can put flowers on its grave and cry respectable is a sight more comforting."

"Yes, that's true," said Irene. "But some griefs are like gallstones. Takes outside aid to get rid of 'em. I hope she falls in love with somebody else," said Miss Mattie. "And I ain't heard you laugh in a coon's age. I never thought nothing could 'a' pulled you down like this. Look like you'd had yaller jaundice."

"I'll get over it," said Irene. "Will Lundy says I'm so healthy I'll have to be knocked on the head when Judgment Day comes."

Abby Whitaker spoke up. "Yes, Will Lundy comes often to keep you—and your family—well, I understand."

Irene opened her eyes in surprise. "Yes, he's a good friend."

Abby rose and went off. "What's biting her now?" snapped Miss Mattie. "Still mad because the preacher married you instead of her?"

"That's an old grievance," said Irene.

quint Tuesday afternoon. Music was enjoyed and a lovely luncheon was served by the hostess.

"Yep, but hate lasts longer'n love sometimes, I've noticed."

A year and a half of such remembrances passed before Irene's mind as she weeded and planted in her garden that March morning—bits of dialogue, swift little pictures, scenes and situations—Tina's trouble all mixed up with church problems, Guinn's spell of gripple, Pat's tonsils operation, the boys' absence at college, their recklessness in wearing out clothes, Sheba's temperament. Will Lundy's unending goodness. What would they all have done in that hard time, but for him? He could get closer to Tina than anybody else. Did she really love him better than she did her father? . . .

Lilith's letters had come from Egypt, from India, from Japan, from Honolulu, telling of the pagentry they passed. Guinn took enormous pleasure from those epistles that gave such descriptions of what she and Dan were seeing, of the places they visited, the experiences they had, and he carried each one around in his pocket till the next one arrived, so that he could read extracts from it to favored intimates. Couldn't he see, poor dear, that she filled her letters with travel stuff to keep from showing herself, that she gave in detail the things they saw and heard in order that she might say nothing of what they were feeling? And what were they feeling, those two wandering children? Travel couldn't last forever. What would be the end of it?

It was always Lilith who wrote, never Dan.

Now and again Irene had tried to speak of Lilith and Dan to Tina, tried to quote from a letter, thinking it would be easier if the child could break through her frozen reserve and discuss the matter. But always one look of hurt and reproach from the brown eyes had been enough to stop the mother's tongue. Tina would react to some fastness of the spirit, remote, inaccessible.

Yet Tina had regained serenity and poise, and a quiet dignity about her that her mother could not help admiring, however much she longed for the winsome gaiety of the little girl that used to be. This woman daughter, unapproachable, with her hard-won calm, her even-tempered courtesy, couldn't make up for the loss of the laughing sprite, with charm for eye and heart alike, that Tina had been. This changeling was more of a woman than her mother was.

She had made progress with her art, and Will Lundy vowed she must go to New York next winter. He would give her training—New York, and then Paris, or Rome, or wherever she wished.

"Tina is my girl," he often said. "Haven't I got a right to have some fun out of my money? The more of it she spends the better I'll like it."

And Tina was willing to take his money instead of her father's, so that in September she was going to New York.

As Irene weeded her flower bed, she visioned her in New York, had glimpses of her pictures hung in galleries, exhibited in salons. But no pictures in salons, no fame in art collections would ever make up to her Tina for the death of her love. . . .

A mist came over the mother's eyes as she gazed at the pansies in the bed, purple and yellow and brown, like so many baby faces smiling up at her. . . . She had thought by this time she'd be holding Tina's baby in her arms!

The postman was coming up the street. She rose from her cramped knees and went to the gate to meet him, with grubby hand outstretched for the letters.

"Always in a hurry to see me in these days, aren't you?" he asked.

"Yes, with two boys at college that don't write home as often as they should. Why doesn't the postal department have some regulation about boys that forget to send letters to their mothers every few days?"

She found a seat in the shade of a tree, to see about the letters. None from the boys this time, but one from Lilith for her. It was postmarked San Francisco. San Francisco!

Dear Mother:

You see, we're back in America. We're tired of traveling about, sick of boats and trains and hotels. We want to come home.

Mother, I'm going to have a baby in a couple of months or less, and I'm scared and homesick. I've been told that every man longs for a son, and so I hope this will be a son for Dan.

I know I haven't any right to ask it, but would you let my baby be born at home under your roof? I used to hate the paragonage, but now I feel it would be a great blessing if my little son could be able to know that he was born there.

But if you'd rather not, just say so and Dan and I will settle down somewhere else. But you always help people when they need it, Mother. Your forgiveness seems like the love of God to me. Devotedly,

LILITH.

She sat for a long time on the garden bench, rereading the letter. The bed of pansies she had just planted swam before her eyes, baby faces, soft and crinkled, and appealing.

But there was Tina! What could she do to shield her from further hurt? Life was such a tangle. Guinn would be happy at having Lilith at home again—he would love Lilith's baby with his whole heart. . . . But Tina?

She must think this thing through, must make her plans, before she spoke to anyone.

It pays to know

When you spend your money for the seven and seventy things that are always popping out of nowhere to demand a portion of your income, you want to be certain they are returning the utmost in value for your every dollar.

But how can you know the worth of the products you buy? Can you test them scientifically?

Can you make microscopic examinations for flaws and imperfections? Chemical analyses for purity and composition? Physical machine-tests for stress and strain, strength and durability? Have you laboratories equipped for this work? Can you afford the scientists and research workers to perform it?

There is a less expensive way to safeguard your purchases. A better way to buy.

Buy products that have been tested by others! Products that have passed the most ruthless and rigid of all tests . . . that of actual use! Nationally known, nationally liked, nationally used products! Advertised products!

Here, in the advertisements, are products of sound worth brought to your attention. Products manufactured to standards of certain quality, that have been tried and tested by the most exacting persons . . . people who have bought them, and used them over and over again. Products worth your money.

CHAPTER LXXXVIII. On Christmas morning Guinn and Irene had a cablegram from Rome.

Love and Christmas wishes to all of you. Lilith and Dan. Later a letter came from Lilith:

"It was so good of you to write to us. We didn't deserve it, at least I didn't. I was to blame for the whole thing, and I don't see how you can forgive me."

After that it was easier to write—though it was never really easy. Guinn sent a letter each week, and Irene now and then, when she would get to thinking of how Lilith needed counsel and love. What was the child suffering—not only separated from the man she loved, but married, in that fashion, to a man she didn't love?

Tina shut herself all day in her room, at her drawing. Or was she drawing?

Sometimes her father could persuade her to go out in the car with him and wait while he made pastoral visits, and sometimes Irene coaxed her to go on an errand with her, but she shrank from seeing people. She went to church after a few weeks, and sat like a marble figure in the pew, but she stole away before the close of the service, to avoid the greeting of the members. She would go out with Will Lundy oftener than with either of her parents.

For months she would not see her friends when they came to the house, nor go out with them, but gradually she relaxed her frozen reserve and took up her friendships again, but her old sparkling spontaneity was gone. She was like a young widow, not garbed in black, but mantled in reserve that forbade sympathy.

Miss Mattie said to Irene one day, "Ain't it awful to watch that child? A grief where you can put flowers on its grave and cry respectable is a sight more comforting."

"Yes, that's true," said Irene. "But some griefs are like gallstones. Takes outside aid to get rid of 'em. I hope she falls in love with somebody else," said Miss Mattie. "And I ain't heard you laugh in a coon's age. I never thought nothing could 'a' pulled you down like this. Look like you'd had valler jaundice."

"I'll get over it," said Irene. "Will Lundy says I'm so healthy I'll have to be knocked on the head when Judgment Day comes." Abby Whitaker spoke up. "Yes, Will Lundy comes often to keep you—and your family—well, I understand."

Irene opened her eyes in surprise. "Yes, he's a good friend."

Abby rose and went off. "What's hitting her now?" snapped Miss Martin. "Still mad because the preacher married you instead of her?"

"That's an old grievance," said Irene.

"Yep, but hate lasts longer'n love sometimes, I've noticed."

A year and a half of such remembrances passed before Irene's mind as she weeded and planted in her garden that March morning—bits of dialogue, swift little pictures, scenes and situations—Tina's trouble all mixed up with church problems, Guinn's spell of grippie, Pat's tonsils operation, the boys' absence at college, their necklessness in wearing out clothes, Sheba's temperment. Will Lundy's unfailing goodness. What would they all have done in that hard time, but for him? He could get closer to Tina than anybody else. Did she really love him better than she did her father? . . .

Lilith's letters had come from Egypt, from India, from Japan, from Honolulu, telling of the pagentry they passed. Guinn took enormous pleasure from those epistles that gave such descriptions of the places they visited, the experiences they had, and he carried each one around in his pocket till the next one arrived, so that he could read extracts from it to favored intimates. Couldn't he see, poor dear, that she filled her letters with travel stuff to keep from showing herself, that she gave in detail the things they saw and heard in order that she might say nothing of what they were feeling? And what were they feeling, those two wandering children? Travel couldn't last forever. What would be the end of it?

It was always Lilith who wrote, never Dan. Now and again Irene had tried to speak of Lilith and Dan to Tina, tried to quote from a letter, thinking it would be easier if the child could break through her frozen reserve and discuss the matter. But always one look of hurt and reproach from the brown eyes had been enough to stop the mother's tongue. Tina would retreat to some fastness of the spirit, remote, inaccessible.

Yet Tina had regained serenity and poise, and a quiet dignity about her that her mother could not help admiring, however much she longed for the winsome gaiety of the little girl that used to be. This woman daughter, unapproachable, with her hard-won calm, her even-tempered courtesy, couldn't make up for the loss of the laughing sprite, with charm for eye and heart alike, that Tina had been. This changeling was more of a woman than her mother was.

She had made progress with her art, and Will Lundy vowed she must go to New York next Winter. He would give her training—New York, and then Paris, or Rome, or wherever she wished. "Tina is my girl," he often said. "Haven't I got a right to have some fun out of my money? The more of it she spends the better I'll like it."

And Tina was willing to take his money instead of her father's, so that in September she was going to New York.

As Irene weeded her flower bed, she visioned her in New York, had glimpses of her pictures hung in galleries, exhibited in salons. But no pictures in salons, no fame in art collections would ever make up to her Tina for the death of her love. . . .

A mist came over the mother's eyes as she gazed at the pansies in the bed, purple and yellow and brown, like so many baby faces smiling up at her. . . . She had thought by this time she'd be holding Tina's baby in her arms!

The postman was coming up the street. She rose from her cramped knees and went to the gate to meet him, with grubby hand outstretched for the letters.

"Always in a hurry to see me in these days, aren't you?" he asked.

"Yes, with two boys at college that don't write home as often as they should. Why doesn't the postal department have some regulation about boys that forget to send letters to their mothers every few days?"

She found a seat in the shade of a tree, to see about the letters. None from the boys this time, but one from Lilith for her. It was postmarked San Francisco. San Francisco!

Dear Mother: You see, we're back in America. We're tired of traveling about, sick of boats and trains and hotels. We want to come home.

Mother, I'm going to have a baby in a couple of months or less, and I'm scared and homesick! I've been told that every man longs for a son, and so I hope this will be a son for Dan.

I know I haven't any right to ask it, but would you let my baby be born at home under your roof? I used to hate the paragonage, but now I feel it would be a great blessing if my little son could be able to know that he was born there.

But if you'd rather not, just say so and Dan and I will settle down somewhere else. But you always help people when they need it. Mother. Your forgiveness seems like the love of God to me. Devotedly.

LILITH.

She sat for a long time on the garden bench, rereading the letter. The bed of pansies she had just planted swam before her eyes, baby faces, soft and crinkled, and appealing.

But there was Tina! What could she do to shield her from further hurt? Life was such a tangle. Guinn would be happy at having Lilith at home again—he would love Lilith's baby with his whole heart. . . . But Tina?

She must think this thing through, must make her plans, before she spoke to anyone.

It pays to know

When you spend your money for the seven and seventy things that are always popping out of nowhere to demand a portion of your income, you want to be certain they are returning the utmost in value for your every dollar.

But how can you know the worth of the products you buy? Can you test them scientifically?

Can you make microscopic examinations for flaws and imperfections? Chemical analyses for purity and composition? Physical machine-tests for stress and strain, strength and durability? Have you laboratories equipped for this work? Can you afford the scientists and research workers to perform it?

There is a less expensive way to safeguard your purchases. A better way to buy.

Buy products that have been tested by others! Products that have passed the most ruthless and rigid of all tests . . . that of actual use! Nationally known, nationally liked, nationally used products! Advertised products!

Here, in the advertisements, are products of sound worth brought to your attention. Products manufactured to standards of certain quality, that have been tried and tested by the most exacting persons . . . people who have bought them, and used them over and over again. Products worth your money.

CIRCULATE FOLDER ON LAKE COUNTRY

County Groups Join in Advertising Lakes and Resorts Near Brainerd

PUBLISH ATTRACTIVE BOOKLET

Table Showing 219 Summer Resorts Included in "A Perfect Vacation"

The Brainerd Chamber of Commerce, Brainerd business men and Crow Wing county have just published and are now circulating a new folder entitled "A Perfect Vacation." They have had 25,000 of these printed in three colors. Distribution has already begun in the southern states where warm weather comes earlier and tourists make early vacation plans. Two hundred tourist bureaus will receive supplies for their racks and the Northern Pacific railway will use them on their demonstration trains and in their displays. These folders will also be handed out at the Chicago outdoor show in May.

Delegates and visitors to the Twin City conventions will be supplied with these folders during the summer, and the people of Brainerd who wish to send copies to their friends in the south can secure same at the Dispatch office or the Chamber of Commerce.

The idea carried out throughout the folder is that Crow Wing county and immediate lake region is the ideal place to spend a vacation and to own a summer home, that it offers the greatest variety of attractions, is easily reached and is prepared to give their visitors the widest possible range of accommodations.

The folder contains answers to most questions tourists ask when interviewing the different information bureaus throughout the country. In order to find out just what these questions would be, publicity men and desk girls at such institutions as the Minneapolis Civic and Commerce Association and Ten Thousand Lakes Association were interviewed.

The folder is convenient and attractive. Its nicely into the pocket of the car where material of this sort is usually carried. The folded edges make it easy to handle and does not roll. It brings to the attention of the tourist that the lakes and pines of Crow Wing county afford a place for a perfect vacation of infinite variety, and also a comfortable vacation.

As the first fold is opened, one is faced with a heart on hinges which invites him to open it and he is faced with a page of pictures that show the diversity of attractions offered by this section. No matter what outdoor sport is desired, the vacationer will find it here.

Another unfolding and before him is a table showing 219 summer resorts, their mileage from Brainerd, post office address and telephone exchange, type of service whether hotel or housekeeping resort, size, charges, recreations offered to guests.

John Alford Kamberling, 41 years old, resort owner at Whitefish Lake died at the St. Joseph's hospital late last evening from spinal meningitis believed to have been caused by an accident, which occurred two weeks ago.

Mr. Kamberling's injuries came in an unusual manner. He had cut down a tree on his land fronting Whitefish Lake and had proceeded to chop the branches from the tree when a small tree which had been forced to the ground by the impact of the larger one sprung back in position, one of the twigs striking him in the ear and penetrating the ear drum.

Although Mr. Kamberling received treatment for his injury his general condition became such that he was forced to go to the hospital.

An autopsy will be conducted on the body tomorrow to determine if the injury resulted in the disease.

Mr. Kamberling was born in Franklin county, Iowa. He was a carpenter by trade. He is well known here having lived in Brainerd at one time.

Funeral rites have not yet been completed.

CAMP FIRE GIRLS ACTIVITIES

The Owansa Camp Fire girls of the Harrison school were given a lovely surprise, when the Parent Teachers' association gave them a donation of $15 toward their camping fund. The girls heartily appreciate such kindness.

Friday afternoon four local guardians and two assistant guardians motored to Minneapolis to attend the Grand Council fire of the state. They will hear speeches and discussions concerning camp fire work and see exhibits of handwork and nature study.

Verena Backman of the Owansa Camp has been on the sick list for some time. She is an enthusiastic worker in the camp that they miss her very much and hope she will soon be back.

At the last meeting of the Owansa Camp it was voted to have the mother-daughter banquet Friday, April 19. The girls who are earning their Firemaker's rank will serve and prepare the entire meal. Several of the girls are busy making place cards, thereby earning a hand craft bead.

They expect to finish their paper drive next week. Anyone who has old magazines or old papers, please call the Harrison school and leave their name and address. The girls will be glad to call for them. The girls expect to go to the Minneapolis camp for girls this summer—a most wonderful experience and are doing all they can to earn the money needed for the trip.

The Ta Ta Pochun Camp Fire met at the home of their leader, Mrs. E. H. Rhodes, the meeting being called to order by the president, Margaret Betty Mahlum. After the business meeting, Miss Eula Michael gave a very helpful talk and demonstrated the work required of girls before they attain the Firemaker's rank.

The girls feel very grateful to the Whittier P. T. A. for sponsoring their troop with a gift of five dollars, and also to Miss Barrett who gave them one dollar.

At the Whittier P. T. A. meeting last Tuesday night, the troop sang several Campfire songs, and short talks were given by the following girls:

Barbara Zapffe—"Give Service."
Dorothy Opsahl—"Be Healthy."
Mary Hoffman—"Be Happy."

CIRCULATE FOLDER ON LAKE COUNTRY

County Groups Join in Advertising Lakes and Resorts Near Brainerd

PUBLISH ATTRACTIVE BOOKLET Table Showing 219 Summer Resorts Included in "A Perfect Vacation"

The Brainerd Chamber of Commerce, Brainerd business men and Crow Wing county have just published and are now circulating a new folder entitled "A Perfect Vacation." They have had 25,000 of these printed in three colors. Distribution has already begun in the southern states where warm weather comes earlier and tourists make early vacation plans. Two hundred tourist bureaus will receive supplies for their racks and the Northern Pacific railway will use them on their demonstration trains and in their displays. These folders will also be handed out at the Chicago outdoor show in May.

Delegates and visitors to the Twin City conventions will be supplied with these folders during the summer, and the people of Brainerd who wish to send copies to their friends in the south can secure same at the Dispatch office or the Chamber of Commerce.

The idea carried out throughout the folder is that Crow Wing county and immediate lake region is the ideal place to spend a vacation and to own a summer home, that it offers the greatest variety of attractions, is easily reached and is prepared to give their visitors the widest possible range of accommodations.

The folder contains answers to most questions tourists ask when interviewing the different information bureaus throughout the country. In order to find out just what these questions would be, publicity men and desk girls at such institutions as the Minneapolis Civic and Commerce Association and Ten Thousand Lakes Association were interviewed.

The folder is convenient and attractive, fits nicely into the pocket of the car where material of this sort is usually carried. The folded edges make it easy to handle and does not roll. It brings to the attention of the tourist that the lakes and pines of Crow Wing county afford a place for a perfect vacation of infinite variety, and also a comfortable vacation.

As the first fold is opened, one is faced with a heart on hinges which invites him to the heart of a vacationer's paradise. The fold invites him to open it and he is faced with a page of pictures that show the diversity of attractions offered by this section. No matter what outdoor sport is desired, the vacationer will find it here.

Another unfolding and before him is a table showing 219 summer resorts, their mileage from Brainerd, post office address and telephone exchange, type of service whether hotel or housekeeping resort, size, charges, recreations offered to guests.

How Do They Make the Holes in Macaroni?

You would learn the answer to this puzzling question, and also many other interesting things, if you could take a sight-seeing trip through a modern macaroni factory such as that of the Creamette Company in Minneapolis. You would also learn why some macaroni and spaghetti cooks up soggy, sticky and tasteless—and other kinds cook to a firm yet tender texture and delicious creamy flavor.

The above picture of a locomotive rolling macaroni dough under its wheels is, of course, only a fancy, but the kneading machine used in an up-to-date macaroni factory does give the dough about the same pressure as would the wheels of a huge railway locomotive.

Macaroni helps N. W. farmers

Everyone who is fortunate enough to see macaroni made in the modern way finds it an amazingly interesting process. First you see carload after carload of the finest durum wheat flour in 100-pound sacks pulled up to the macaroni factory. Durum wheat, best grown in the Dakotas and some parts of Minnesota, affords a substantial portion of farm income in the Northwest. Durum wheat makes a yellow bread that is not pleasing to Americans, so the Northwest's durum crop did not bring a good price until the macaroni business discovered it and gave it a huge market. This was a great help to Northwest farmers since durum produces a good crop in some of the drouth areas where ordinary wheat is not very successful. Best quality durum has a high per cent of gluten; white bread or cake flour makes a sticky paste but not good macaroni.

For making macaroni, durum wheat is ground to a special form of flour similar to granulated sugar—this is called semolina.

Inside the macaroni factory you see men in white clothes emptying the 100-pound sacks of durum semolina into a huge white metal bin or hopper from which the semolina pours, when wanted, into a giant sifter on the floor below. This sifter fluffs up the semolina and also removes any stray pieces of string that may have come loose from the flour sacks.

The sifted semolina is next carefully measured by exact weight and deposited in a white steel mixer as large as a piano. Pure water that has been warmed to the correct temperature is next added to the semolina and the powerful steel blades of the mixer are set to working. The dough for egg noodles is also mixed in these same machines, after the eggs and other ingredients have been added, according to the manufacturer's private recipe.

Huge machine kneads dough

When the mixing expert approves a batch of dough, the kneading machine receives it. This kneader looks much like a huge dish-pan as large as the kitchen in many homes. The dough looks like a large doughnut as thick as a man's body. The pan turns around slowly, carrying the dough around with it and forcing it under two giant kneading wheels directly opposite each other inside the mixing pan. Each one of these kneaders looks like a huge cog wheel the size of a bushel basket—each wheel weighs about half a ton and is forced into the dough by a steel axle the size of a man's arm. After the doughnut of dough leaves one kneading wheel, it is turned on edge by guiding hands of steel so that the next kneading wheel strikes it on edge and smashes it flat again.

The kneading expert leans closer to tell you that these wheels give a pressure of many hundreds of thousands of pounds, that they would crush a two-by-four timber to splinters if given the chance. The dough receives a pressure as great as though rolled by the wheels of a huge railway locomotive.

Why heavy pressure is used

"Why do you use so much pressure?" you ask our guide.

"That's what it takes to make macaroni and Creamettes of firm, creamy texture," he replies. "This new type of machine cost us a lot of money but we couldn't live up to our policy of making only the best macaroni products without them."

Evidently making good macaroni is a very different matter from kneading bread dough or making fluffy pie-crust.

Dough for egg noodles, when correctly kneaded, is "finished" by a sort of rolling-pin machine that squeezes it thinner and thinner through a series of polished steel rollers. Macaroni dough is not rolled but cut into huge chunks as big as a small table top and packed into a huge cylinder that looks like a cannon. A heavy steel plunger forces the dough towards the muzzle of the "cannon" where it comes out of holes in a metal plate as either macaroni or spaghetti, depending upon the size of the hole. A housewife immediately thinks of her food grinder as similar to this macaroni "cannon."

Unusual cleanliness is everywhere evident in this Minneapolis macaroni factory. Employees are clad in white, floors and tables are scrubbed daily, oil and dust enclosures are everywhere. Any portions of macaroni or Creamettes that fall to the floor are gathered up and sold for chicken feed.

Five things that make macaroni flavor

"The flavor of macaroni products," says our guide, "depends upon many things of which five are the most important—

1. Using the best semolina.
2. Correct water temperature for mixing.
3. High pressure kneading and rolling.
4. Terrific pressure in the macaroni machine.
5. Proper curing methods.

"How can a housewife be sure she is buying good macaroni?" "Good macaroni products are creamy-colored and not white," answers our guide. "Good macaroni should have a smooth, even texture with no flaws or weak spots. It should cook up fluffy, firm yet tender—never soggy, pasty or flat in taste. Of course, macaroni should be chilled after cooking, according to directions on the package, if you want to be sure of the most delicious flavor and texture."

"After all, there is one easy way for a housewife to be sure of getting good macaroni products each time," the guide smiled.

"What is that?" we asked.

"Find a good brand and then insist on getting it," was his reply.

Now here is how they make the holes in macaroni

Here's how the holes are made

The drawing shows how a metal pin with a tiny cup on one end, is mounted inside the hole in the macaroni plate. Dough is forced through this little cup in two half-rolls—as it slides past the pin, the two streams of dough are squeezed together into a hollow tube by the hole in the macaroni plate which surrounds the pin. To make a perfect macaroni tube, the dough must be perfectly mixed, of correct moisture proportions, and the pressure must be terrific—or the process will not work. This macaroni "cannon" squeezes the dough with a pressure about equal to the entire weight of a large railway locomotive—over 200 tons.

Macaroni and spaghetti are squeezed out from a vertical cylinder and hang in long strings. A workman cuts them off to the right length and a girl drops them over a pole like a broom-handle and then hangs the pole on a "clothes-rack" on wheels. When a rack is full of hanging macaroni or spaghetti, it is wheeled away to the curing room where it is dried several days by a controlled airblast process. When thoroughly cured, it is sawed to exact length and placed in packages and cases for delivery to your grocer.

Egg noodles are made in much the same way as macaroni except that the dough is rolled out in a long, thin sheet and wound up on a steel bar like a roll of butcher's wrapping paper. This roll of dough then unrolls into cutting rollers which slice it in narrow strips of noodles that are cut off automatically at proper length and tossed into loose folds by a folding machine. They are then dropped into screen-bottomed trays and sent to the curing room.

How Creamettes are made

Creamettes, the special inch-long, elbow-shaped macaroni made in Minneapolis, is cut off as it squeezes through the holes in the end of the macaroni "cannon," by a rotating knife-blade similar to the one used on home food grinding machines. Creamettes are then poured into screen-bottomed trays and sent to the curing room where a special curing process is used for several days.

When curing is complete, Creamettes are poured into an automatic machine which weighs out exactly eight ounces into each package, glues and seals it. These sealed packages are packed in shipping cases by hand and another machine takes the cases, glues them top and bottom and holds them sealed until the glue has time to stick.

Unusual cleanliness is everywhere evident in this Minneapolis macaroni factory. Employees are clad in white, floors and tables are scrubbed daily, oil and dust enclosures are everywhere. Any portions of macaroni or Creamettes that fall to the floor are gathered up and sold for chicken feed.

How Do They Make the Holes in Macaroni?

You would learn the answer to this puzzling question, and also many other interesting things, if you could take a sight-seeing trip through a modern macaroni factory such as that of the Creamette Company in Minneapolis. You would also learn why some macaroni and spaghetti cooks up soggy, sticky and tasteless—and other kinds cook to a firm yet tender texture and delicious creamy flavor.

The above picture of a locomotive rolling macaroni dough under its wheels is, of course, only a fancy, but the kneading machine used in an up-to-date macaroni factory does give the dough about the same pressure as would the wheels of a huge railway locomotive.

Macaroni helps N. W. farmers

Everyone who is fortunate enough to see macaroni made in the modern way finds it an amazingly interesting process. First you see carload after carload of the finest durum wheat flour in 100-pound sacks pulled up to the macaroni factory. Durum wheat, best grown in the Dakotas and some parts of Minnesota, affords a substantial portion of farm income in the Northwest. Durum wheat makes a yellow bread that is not pleasing to Americans, so the Northwest's durum crop did not bring a good price until the macaroni business discovered it and gave it a huge market. This was a great help to Northwest farmers since durum produces a good crop in some of the drouth areas where ordinary wheat is not very successful. Best quality durum has a high per cent of gluten; white bread or cake flour makes a sticky paste but not good macaroni.

For making macaroni, durum wheat is ground to a special form of flour similar to granulated sugar—this is called semolina. Inside the macaroni factory you see men in white clothes emptying the 100-pound sacks of durum semolina into a huge white metal bin or hopper from which the semolina pours, when wanted, into a giant sifter on the floor below. This sifter fluffs up the semolina and also removes any stray pieces of string that may have come loose from the flour sacks.

The sifted semolina is next carefully measured by exact weight and deposited in a white steel mixer as large as a piano. Pure water that has been warmed to the correct temperature is next added to the semolina and the powerful steel blades of the mixer are set to working. The dough for egg noodles is also mixed in these same machines, after the eggs and other ingredients have been added, according to the manufacturer's private recipe.

Huge machine kneads dough

When the mixing expert approves a batch of dough, the kneading machine receives it. This kneader looks much like a huge dish-pan as large as the kitchen in many homes. The dough looks like a large doughnut as thick as a man's body. The pan turns around slowly, carrying the dough around with it and forcing it under two giant kneading wheels directly opposite each other inside the mixing pan. Each one of these kneaders looks like a huge cog wheel the size of a bushel basket—each wheel weighs about half a ton and is forced into the dough by a steel axle the size of a man's arm. After the doughnut of dough leaves one kneading wheel, it is turned on edge by guiding hands of steel so that the next kneading wheel strikes it on edge and smashes it flat again.

The kneading expert leans closer to tell you that these wheels give a pressure of many hundreds of thousands of pounds, that they would crush a two-by-four timber to splinters if given the chance. The dough receives a pressure as great as though rolled by the wheels of a huge railway locomotive.

Why heavy pressure is used "Why do you use so much pressure?" you ask our guide.

"That's what it takes to make macaroni and Creamettes of firm, creamy texture," he replies. "This new type of machine cost us a lot of money but we couldn't live up to our policy of making only the best macaroni products without them."

Evidently making good macaroni is a very different matter from kneading bread dough or making fluffy pie-crust.

Dough for egg noodles, when correctly kneaded, is "finished" by a sort of rolling-pin machine that squeezes it thinner and thinner through a series of polished steel rollers. Macaroni dough is not rolled but cut into huge chunks as big as a small table top and packed into a huge cylinder that looks like a cannon. A heavy steel plunger forces the dough towards the muzzle of the "cannon" where it comes out of holes in a metal plate as either macaroni or spaghetti, depending upon the size of the hole. A housewife immediately thinks of her food grinder as similar to this macaroni "cannon."

Now here is how they make the holes in macaroni

Here's how the holes are made

The drawing shows how a metal pin with a tiny cup on one end, is mounted inside the hole in the macaroni plate. Dough is forced through this little cup in two half-round streams—as it slides past the pin, the two streams of dough are squeezed together into a hollow tube by the hole in the macaroni plate which surrounds the pin. To make a perfect macaroni tube, the dough must be perfectly mixed, of correct moisture proportions, and the pressure must be terrific—or the process will not work. This macaroni "cannon" squeezes the dough with a pressure about equal to the entire weight of a large railway locomotive—over 200 tons.

Macaroni and spaghetti are squeezed out from a vertical cylinder and hang in long strings. A workman cuts them off to the right length and a girl drops them over a pole like a broom-handle and then hangs the pole on a "clothes-rack" on wheels. When a rack is full of hanging macaroni or spaghetti, it is wheeled away to the curing room where it is dried several days by a controlled airblast process. When thoroughly cured, it is sawed to exact length and placed in packages and cases for delivery to your grocer.

Egg noodles are made in much the same way as macaroni except that the dough is rolled out in a long, thin sheet and wound up on a steel bar like a roll of butcher's wrapping paper. This roll of dough then unrolls into cutting rollers which slice it in narrow strips of noodles that are cut off automatically at proper length and tossed into loose folds by a folding machine. They are then dropped into screen-bottomed trays and sent to the curing room.

How Creamettes are made

Creamettes, the special inch-long, elbow-shaped macaroni made in Minneapolis, is cut off as it squeezes through the holes in the end of the macaroni "cannon," by a rotating knife-blade similar to the one used on home food grinding machines. Creamettes are then poured into screen-bottomed trays and sent to the curing room where a special curing process is used for several days.

When curing is complete, Creamettes are poured into an automatic machine which weighs out exactly eight ounces into each package, glues and seals it. These sealed packages are packed in shipping cases by hand and another machine takes the cases, glues them top and bottom and holds them sealed until the glue has time to stick.

Unusual cleanliness is everywhere evident in this Minneapolis macaroni factory. Employees are clad in white, floors and tables are scrubbed daily, oil and dust enclosures are everywhere. Any portions of macaroni or Creamettes that fall to the floor are gathered up and sold for chicken feed.

Five things that make macaroni flavor

"The flavor of macaroni products," says our guide, "depends upon many things of which five are the most important—"

1. Using the best semolina.
2. Correct water temperature for mixing.
3. High pressure kneading and rolling.
4. Terrific pressure in the macaroni machine.
5. Proper curing methods."

"How can a housewife be sure she is buying good macaroni?" "Good macaroni products are creamy-colored and not white," answers our guide. "Good macaroni should have a smooth, even texture with no flaws or weak spots. It should cook up fluffy, firm yet tender—never soggy, pasty or flat in taste. Of course, macaroni should be chilled after cooking, according to directions on the package, if you want to be sure of the most delicious flavor and texture."

"After all, there is one easy way for a housewife to be sure of getting good macaroni products each time," the guide smiled.

"Find a good brand and then insist on getting it," was his reply.
